Getting cash back for innovation

A client developed a domestic alarm system that could be activated remotely. The process had taken several years to develop with a considerable amount of time and money invested.

After consultation, we considered that the research qualified for cash back under the research and development tax credit scheme introduced in April 2000.

Following several rounds of correspondence and negotiations, the Tax Inspector paid our client around £72,000 for 4 years of research including interest. Furthermore, the repayment was made within 4 weeks of the claim.
